Selected Research and Scholarship Activity

Town Morphology: Archival research and field documentation to interpret historic and contemporary development patterns in railroad and mining towns in the intermountain west. This on-going research project is intended to contribute to the understanding of western town development and support contemporary planning efforts in communities seeking to sustain cultural heritage and natural amenities while transitioning from economies based on resource extraction to mountain recreation and amenities. (papers, book chapters and manuscript in progress)

Community Revitalization: Funded Community Design and Planning Studies for (50+) Northwest communities 1988-present in collaboration with city governments, citizens, business organizations, state agencies, tribes, and students and faculty in architecture, landscape architecture, interior design and bio-regional planning 1989-present in Idaho, Washington, Montana and Oregon

Sustainable Development (with emphasis on amenity towns) Invited workshops and presentations in cooperation with non-profits, regional professional planning organizations, state and local governments

Architectural Consulting: Historic Preservation and adaptive use projects, downtown revitalization, and new residential projects

Participatory Design: Tools and visualization strategies for citizen participation in community design contexts
